

Crime

By Kailey Keegan and Christian Kolker

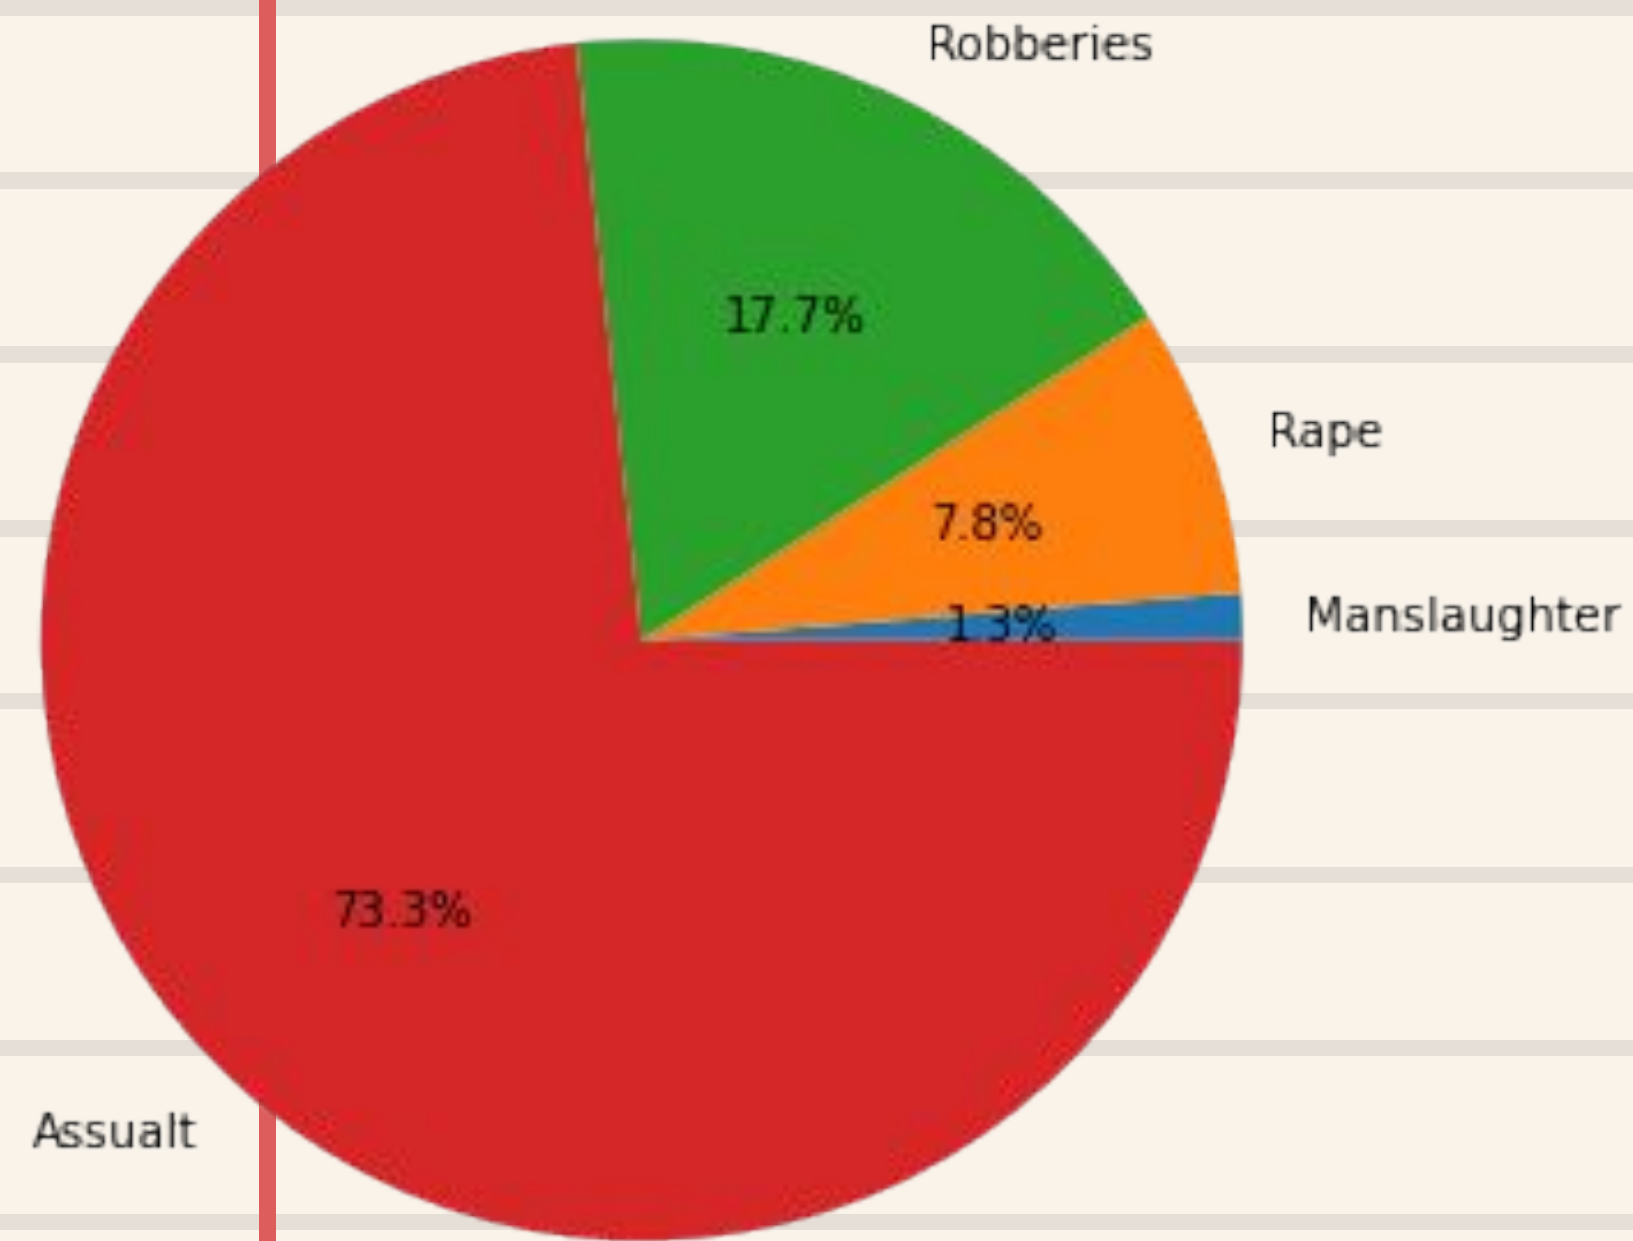

According to our data, based on FBI Crime statistics in 2019, we found that violent crimes are similar in New York and California.

Whereas hate crime seem to differ between New York, with more focus on anti-religion, and California, with a focus on anti-race.

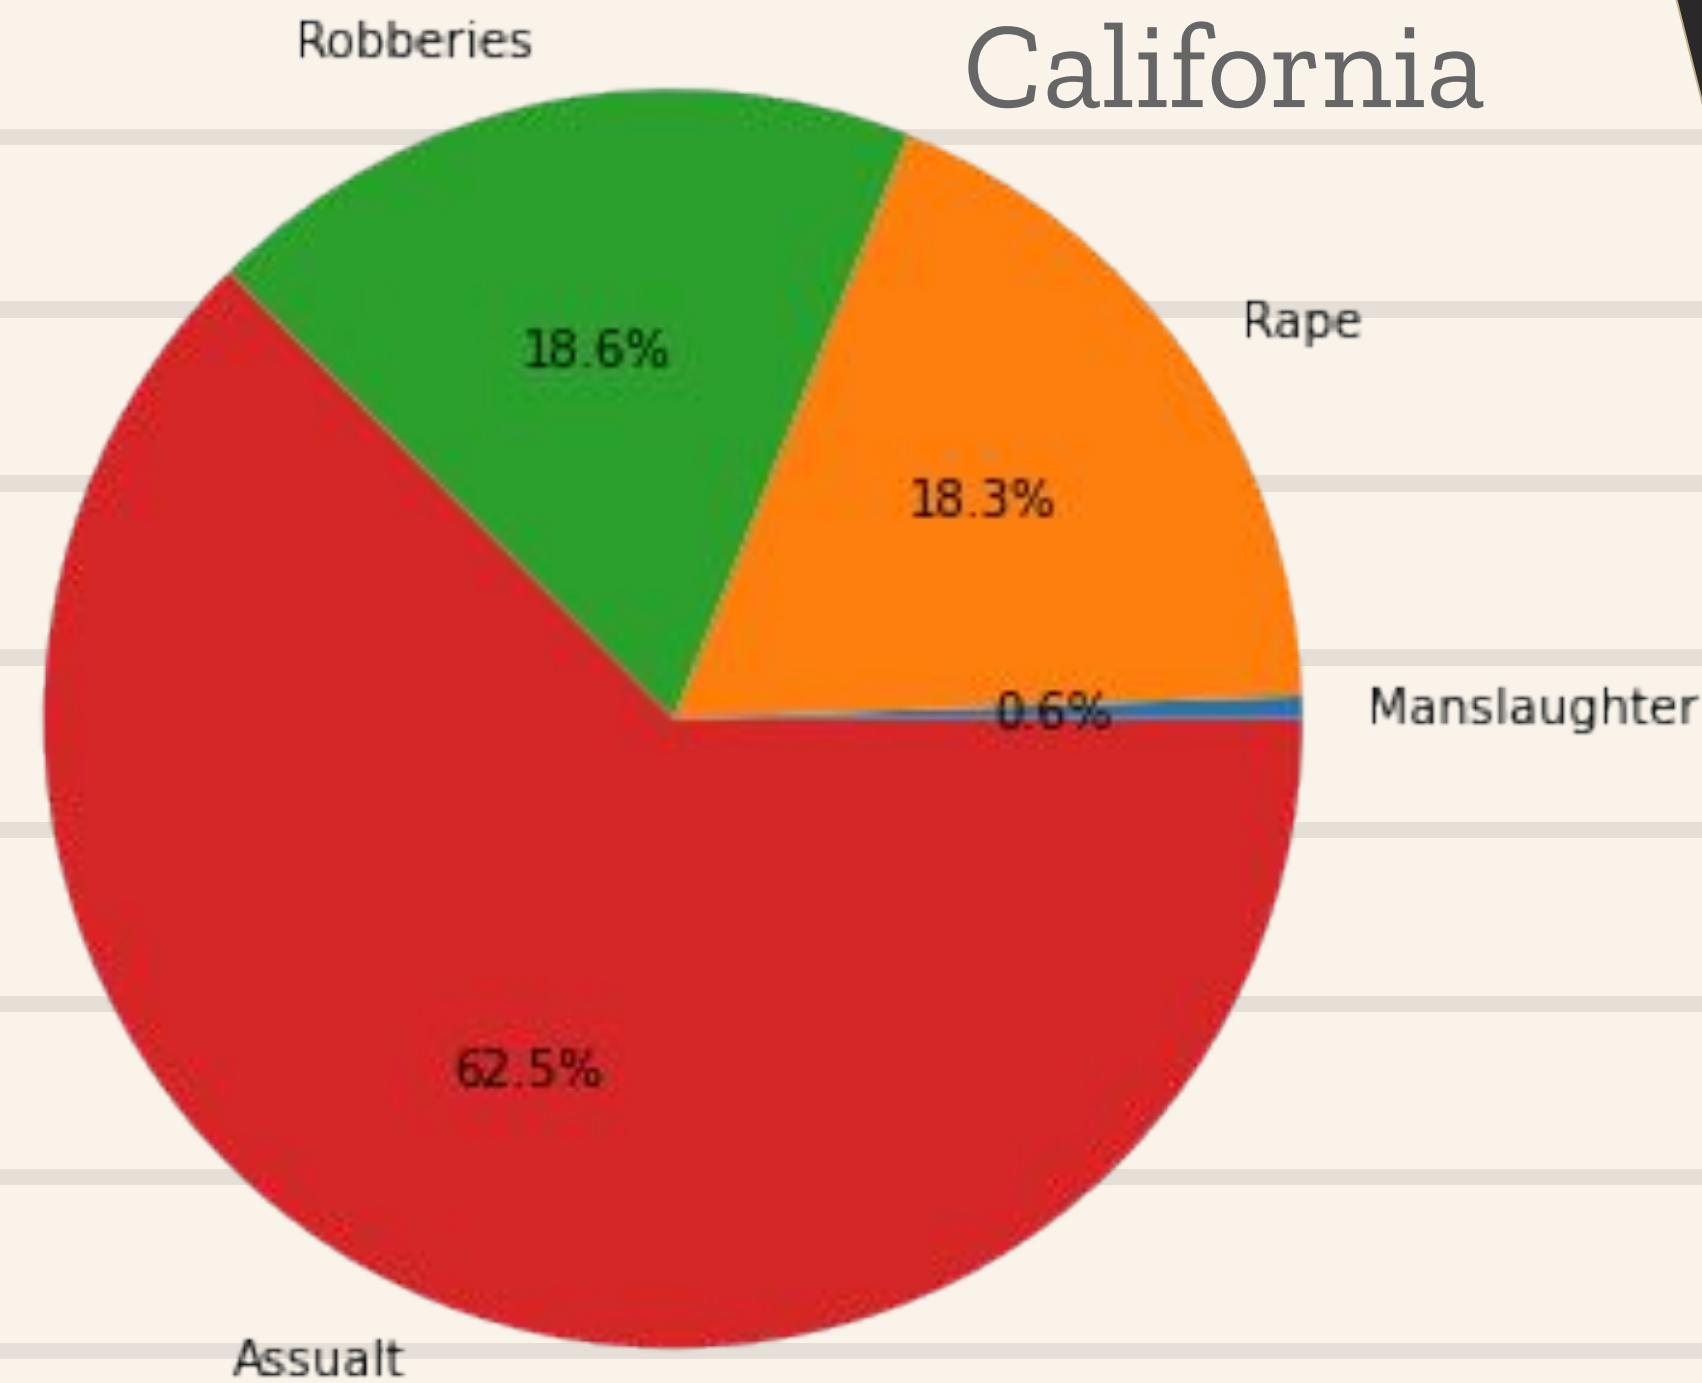

The scatter plot below shows no relation between violent and hate crimes. Therefore, our data shows that with a low amount of one type of crime, there can be any amount of the other crime. Additionally, we notice that northern states have more hate crimes, while southern states have more violent crimes.
